You take a second to take stock and assess the progress of the battle.

Both Imperial forces continue towards their respective targets—the smaller force of swift Valliers and heavily armed Grogards will launch their attack on the warships of the Caliburn's battlegroup at any moment, while the much larger force of Revolve bombardment mecha and their massive escort of Fantins are almost in position to launch their attack on the civilian evacuation ships.

However, thanks to your efforts, allied combat armatures have taken position around the civilian transports. They may be enough to repel any attempted Imperial attack.

The options available to you seem clear: position your lance to defend the warships and help preserve your home carrier and her escorts for future battles, or protect the civilian evacuees and save tens of thousands of lives.

There is also a third option. The advance of the two groups of Imperial combat armatures has left a large gap in between the two strike forces and left the Imperial fleet wide open. You could always eschew the defense altogether and strike directly at the ships of the Imperial fleet. Without combat armatures covering them, the ships of the enemy's fleet are more vulnerable to your lance than they have any right to be. You could inflict devastating losses on the enemy this way, but only if you abandon the civilians, the Caliburn, and your fellow pilots to fend for themselves.

What will you do?

- ☒ Defend the battlegroup.
- ☐ Defend the evacuation transports.
- ☐ Strike at the enemy fleet.
