Unusual presentation of dog dander in a patient with seronegative scleroderma. Seronegative scleroderma is characterized by widespread sclerosis and is associated with positive Ro and La antibodies. A 34-year-old woman with seronegative scleroderma was found to have extensive plaque-like lesions on her palms. On histologic examination of biopsy specimens taken from her hands, the dermal sclerosis was patchy, and the pattern of epidermal changes resembled that seen in patients with scabies and acanthosis nigricans. Eosinophils were found in the biopsy specimens, but the patient was not treated with antihistamines or corticosteroids. The lesions were treated with permethrin lotion. The patient was given a 2-week course of oral prednisone at a dosage of 40 mg daily and had
